Fit for

A Queen

Pomp & Circumstance Aplenty
For Elizabeth II's Visit

By Donnie Radcliffe
Washington Post Staff Writer

She's not our queen, but before we're through with her, she'll probably think she is. Two centuries after George III lost the colonies, Queen Elizabeth II is in danger of winning them back.

Or so it might seem for all the carryings-on over the royal road show starring her and her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, that begins tomorrow. For the next three days in Washington, and six after that in Florida and Texas, Britain's 63rd monarch in 1,000 years will be wined, dined, gifted, toasted, curtsied, filmed, quoted, saluted, satired, cheered and doubtless even jeered.

She is, after all, the closest Americans will ever get to a genuine queen of their own.

After two years in production—George Bush first invited her when she had him to lunch at Buckingham Palace in 1989—the spectator sport of Royals Watching now gets underway in earnest. Commoners should be able to catch a glimpse of the queen outside her public stops and along her motorcade route. And recession-weary Americans can shamelessly indulge themselves in a fantasy world of crowns, castles and red carpets.

Royal Visit

This great-great-great-great-granddaughter of Britain's last monarch to rule us is no stranger in these parts. She's been to Washington three times (1951, 1957, 1976) and to the West and Midwest five others (1959, 1983, 1984, 1986, 1989). What sets this visit apart is that for the first time in America's 384-year history as a British colony that became a nation, a British monarch will appear before the governing body to address its members.

Both the U.S. Congress and Buckingham Palace would be loath to suggest the delay had anything to do with 1776, when the Brits lost a major foothold in the New World, or 1812, when they tried to recapture it. That the visit follows the latest instance of Anglo-American unity in the Persian Gulf War seems to be a happy coincidence.

Though basically a shy woman not known for her public speaking, the 65-year-old queen is described as "looking forward" to the occasion. The palace predicts a stellar performance.

"When you have two great democracies like ours, and a head of state with such long experience on the throne speaking about our cooperation as allies, you'll be moved to hear what she has to say," her spokesman said.

Her schedule would give even George Bush pause. In the 72 hours she spends in Washington she'll make 18 announced appearances.

In Washington, she'll bed-and-breakfast at Blair House in a suitably majestic five-room, two-bath suite that includes a separate-but-almost-equal spouse's bedroom abloom with flowered wallpaper and matching curtains—if Prince Philip wants it.

Across Pennsylvania Avenue at the White House tomorrow, placecards will await her and Philip at lunch after the arrival ceremony on the South Lawn. (At her own dinners, the queen is the only person without a placecard. "She knows where she sits," an aide once said.) Before she leaves for Arlington National Cemetery, she'll plant a tree and bestow upon George Bush the Winston Churchill Foundation Award recognizing his commitment to Anglo-American relations. Since it isn't her award, getting her to present it is something of a coup. "The next time, they'll have to get God," Churchill's grandson and namesake said recently.

For the state dinner in her honor a few hours later, 130 of Washington's most official and the Bushes' most friendly will be waiting to meet her. She's aware of who's invited but avoids any kibitzing over the guest list—or so they say—preferring to operate on the when-in-Rome principle.

Her arrival at the White House and entrance into the State Dining Room later will be heralded by the U.S. Marine Band playing "Orb and Sceptre" by William Walton, the work commissioned for her coronation in 1952. "She'll know it," said Col. John Bourgeois, the band's director who arranged the chamber orchestra version.

There will be no cutesy novelty songs insinuating sexy lyrics, as happened in 1976 when the Captain and Tennille sang "Muskrat Love" before a throng that included Alice Roosevelt Longworth. The Bushes are relying on a proven winner, soprano Jessye Norman, who wowed Francois Mitterrand, his guest George Bush and a television audience of millions on the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution two years ago in Paris.

Whether Bush would ask the queen to dance is a state secret, though the odds are against it. The last time she danced with a U.S. president she probably regretted it. In 1976, Gerald Ford led her onto the dance floor at the very moment the Marine Band, playing a Rodgers and Hart medley, glided into "The Lady Is a Tramp."

"It's long been removed from the repertoire," said Bourgeois.

Wednesday morning, while Prince Philip, a captain-general in the Royal Marines, visits Quantico Marine Air Station, the queen, accompanied by Mayor Sharon Pratt Dixon and Barbara Bush, will visit the newly opened Richard England Clubhouse in Northeast Washington. They'll watch a 10-minute demonstration of double-dutch rope jumping, basketball and cheerleading by members of the Police Boys and Girls Club. At the nearby Marshall Heights community development program, Alice Frazier, 65, will be waiting to show her around the first home she's ever owned.

"I might not have a palace like her," Frazier said, "but it's a palace to me."

Just before noon at the Sheraton Washington Hotel, the queen will give a reception for 250 reporters. She's not without her motives.

"The Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh like to have an opportunity early in the programme when they go overseas to meet representatives of the media covering the visit," says a note accompanying presentation cards. "This reception is intended as an informal, social occasion and guests are reminded that conversation at the reception is regarded as private, entirely off-the-record and not for use in the media."

Don't blame the queen, the British Embassy tells reporters who complain about being left off her invitation list. "We tell them to take it up with their news organizations since we asked them to submit the names," said an embassy source.

From there, the royal couple goes on to the Library of Congress for lunch in the newly restored Thomas Jefferson Building with 300 guests, including Jessica Tandy, Angela Lansbury, Richard Attenborough, David Attenborough and Martin Scorsese. Everybody will be celebrating "The Great British Picture Show," a three-week festival of British film and television, but also dining on cuisine Jefferson himself liked to serve, painstakingly researched at Monticello.

In mid-afternoon Wednesday, it's garden party time, a tradition begun by Queen Victoria so she could meet her own kind. In foreign climes it's more a chance for Victoria's great-great-granddaughter to meet the natives. The embassy denies that a privileged few of the 1,800 invited guests will be pre-selected and told to stand in a particular spot in the embassy garden to await a royal introduction.

"What happens is that the ambassador or others may see people in the crowd they want her to meet and bring them forward then. Or the queen may simply stop of her own accord," said an embassy official.

And how does one act, dress and talk in the presence of this woman?

"Perfectly naturally," said the official. "There are certain myths that are not true—that you have to wear hats or gloves, that you have to curtsy. If she does speak to you, she'll be knowledgeable and ask sensible questions."

"She puts you at ease by focusing on you, unlike some people in Washington who are constantly looking over your shoulder," said Anne Richardson, whose husband, Elliot, was U.S. ambassador to the Court of St. James's in 1975.

By the same token, said Selwa Roosevelt, former U.S. chief of protocol, "she has a dismissive way that lets you know that when she's finished, she's finished. She knows how to be queen."

She also knows how to please crowds. The queen is "very keen about seeing something of the country, the people and the way of life," said an embassy source. Just as she wanted to see Bloomingdale's when she went to New York in 1976, she sent word that she wanted to see a baseball game this time around. She'll get her wish Wednesday night when Bush takes her to the Baltimore Orioles-Oakland Athletics game in Baltimore.

"I can't think of anybody better than having the former starting varsity first baseman of the Yale team at her side to explain the intricacies of the American national pastime," said Chief of Protocol Joseph V. Reed, a longtime friend of Bush's.

On Thursday, the royal pair goes to the Folger Shakespeare Library to see exhibits and watch part of the children's festival before going on to the Capitol for the queen's address to the joint meeting of Congress. They'll join House Speaker Thomas S. Foley and his other guests for lunch in Statuary Hall, then the queen and Philip will head for Mount Vernon, home of a distant relative.

Though George Washington was a Virginian by birth and never set foot in England, his great-grandfather left there in 1659. Through him, Washington and Elizabeth share a common ancestor, King Edward I, who is also an ancestor of George Bush's.

It all makes for a cozy time, when Bush and the queen reunite Thursday night at her reciprocal dinner for him and Barbara Bush at the British Embassy. Friday morning, after attending a short service in the Washington Cathedral, the Defender of the Faith heads to Andrews Air Force Base for points south.

The Royal Retinue, With Ladies and Gents in Waiting

By Roxanne Roberts
Washington Post Staff Writer

Presidents have handlers. Rock stars have roadies. If anyone deserves an entourage, it's Elizabeth the Second, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and of her other Realms and Territories, Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith.

What—you expected her to schlep the tiaras herself?

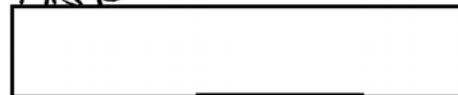

No way. When the Concorde touches down at Andrews Air Force Base tomorrow, the queen and her consort will be accompanied by about 40 royal retainers. Impressive by modern-day standards, but nothing compared with King Henry VIII, who took 4,500 men along to meet Francis I of France in 1520.

"Remember, this is a state visit with two very close allies," said one official from Buckingham Palace. "Its importance is of the very highest level."

Royal Party

ENTOURAGE, From B1

The queen's party will likely include the master of the royal household, two ladies-in-waiting, two private secretaries, an equerry, two dressers, two maids, her hairdresser, the press secretary, the captain of the queen's flight, a physician, two detectives, six footmen, and a secretary and valet for Prince Philip.

Their task, honed from hundreds of years of pomp and ceremony, is to keep Her Majesty's trip free from the embarrassing glitches that plague your everyday tourist—such as lost luggage.

(Speaking of luggage, they will bring anywhere from one to six tons for the 10-day visit, including the queen's two standing wardrobes on wheels, portable chest of clothes, leather trunks and a special trunk for the state gown.)

Mostly, however, they wait—hovering in the background while the queen smiles, waves, gazes admiringly at a new building, listens to long, boring speeches or gives short, boring speeches.

Of those who stand and wait, the most visible are the queen's two senior ladies-in-waiting. One is Lady Airlie, 57, the American-born debutante Ginny Ryan, who has served since 1973. (Lady Airlie is married to Lord Airlie, also known as the lord chamberlain, the most senior member of the royal household responsible for everything on the domestic side of all five royal residences.) The second lady-in-waiting is Kathryn Dugdale, 67, who has worked for the queen since 1956.

"They carry the flowers, the messages and little gifts from the crowd," says Margaret Holder, a writer for Royalty magazine who has been following the Windsor family for 10 years. "They're all personal friends of the queen she can talk to in the limousines."

The private secretaries—Sir Robert Fellowes (who is married to Princess Diana's sister, Jane) and Sir Kenneth Scott—will handle the scheduling details of the visit.

The queen's equerry, a military aide drawn from one of the three armed services, attends her on all official and ceremonial occasions, while plainclothes detectives serve as bodyguards. In addition, there are security men dressed as workmen, street cleaners and guests at the events.

The detectives carry cash in case something catches the royal eye. The contents of the royal purse are a closely guarded secret, but according to Holder, it contains Cyclax Jubilee Pink lipstick, a gold powder compact, smelling salts, reading glasses, a lace hankie, a dog whistle (her beloved Corgis have to stay at home; the whistle is to be used on any unruly American mutts she might encounter), and treats for horses.

No passport, though—it's not required anywhere in the world. And no keys—all doors are opened for her. She's never carried a key in her life.

British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd will join the queen on this visit, as will her racing manager, Lord Caernarvon, who shares the queen's passion for horseflesh.

"He is the queen's closest, closest friend," says Holder. "He often shares her TV dinners at Buckingham Palace, and they talk about the day's racing and the progress of her horses." (Lady C., by the way, is the former Jean Margaret Wallop, sister of Sen. Malcolm Wallop of Wyoming.)

Royal chefs from Britannia, the queen's 412-foot yacht staffed by a crew of 254, will meet up with the party for the Miami leg of her visit. Her bags, however, always include Earl Grey tea, shortbread, fruitcake and jam for snacks; sausages, presumably for the staff; and barley sugar, a hard candy that she has enjoyed since she was a child.

Her Majesty's hairdresser, Charles Mostyn, keeps the royal coif in order, and the two dressers keep the royal wardrobe in perfect condition—pressing, laying out and coordinating all her outfits. For a six-day state visit to Japan, the queen brought 30 dresses, 40 pairs of 6½AA shoes, 15 hats and four tiaras. This trip is expected to exceed that: At least two outfits have been prepared for each public appearance, and each dress was selected to retain the royal dignity—skirts can be neither too tight for getting out of limousines nor too loose lest they blow up on windy days.

The queen always carries mourning clothes and black-edged note paper while traveling in case of a royal death. While in Kenya in 1952, Elizabeth received news that her father had died and that she had ascended to the throne.

According to a palace official, the queen will not appear in full state robes, which are used only for certain traditional occasions, such as the opening of Parliament. Ditto for the crown jewels, which do not travel outside Britain.

But the queen, who is the richest woman in the world, has a fabulous personal collection of jewelry—which catapults even the dowdiest ensemble into a category of its own. "She always wears great clunking jewels that hang down past her neckline," says Holder. The queen also owns about 20 tiaras, and often wears a different one for each formal event during her tours.

The palace keeps mum about the rest of her personal luggage, but the queen reportedly never travels without:

- A white kidskin toilet seat. "No one's ever seen it, but it's very possible," says Holder. "The thing is, every toilet she ever sits on is scrupulously cleaned—if not newly built. If it's true, it must be carried by a lady-in-waiting in a case."
- A hot-water bottle.
- 50 pints of HIV-tested matching blood plasma, now standard procedure for all the royal family.
- A silver monogrammed tea kettle and matching tea canister.
- Several crates of Malvern bottled water.
- Cyclax All-Day Skin Firmer.
- 35mm cameras for personal photographs.
- Pine soap and lemon shampoo.
- Duck-feather pillows.
- Framed family photos.
- Crossword puzzles. The queen has been observed finishing a puzzle moments before a speech to Parliament.
- And umbrellas. Of course.

The Queen's Horses

On May 15, Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip will watch the Baltimore Orioles play baseball. It will be the first time the queen has seen the game, though her husband played it as a boy when he attended the American School near Paris. The royal couple will be on a state visit to Washington, D.C., May 13-17 and undoubtedly will take time out to look in on the queen's racehorses—leading the good life in Versailles, Ky., under the care of William Stamps Farish III, heir to a Standard Oil fortune.

Queen Elizabeth II hasn't made an official visit to the U.S. since 1983, but she has made several personal trips to the horse farms of Kentucky, including this 1989 visit to Land's End Farm in Versailles.

Norman, Alamo, Orioles fit into queen's Southern sweep

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Queen Elizabeth II is planning a little all-American fun on her ninth visit to the United States. She'll meet "Storain" Norman Schwarzkopf, eat popcorn at a baseball game and remember the Alamo.

But the queen's visit also will have a formal side.

She'll address Congress — she's the first British monarch to do so — visit a housing project in the nation's capital, tour George Washington's home at Mount Vernon and host a garden party.

Because the queen and her husband, Prince Philip, are the guests of President Bush and his wife, Barbara, the state visit will include a White House dinner and a reciprocal event at the British Embassy.

The closely guarded invitation lists for those parties have kept Washington's social set on tenterhooks for weeks. Bruised egos have already surfaced.

Evangeline Bruce, the doyenne of Washington society and widow of David K.E. Bruce, the former U.S. ambassador to Britain, for example, was excluded from the black-tie sit-down dinner at the embassy.

The queen is using her official trip — she arrives today for nine days — to get to know America better. After four days in Washington, she'll head to Florida and Texas.

"If you look at the queen's previous visits, there is a clear gap in the southeast quadrant from Texas to Florida," said Michael Price, a spokesman at the British Embassy. "She is going there because she has not been there before, and secondly because these are very important states with fast-growing populations."

Because the queen is the queen, she presumably can go anywhere she wants — and meet anyone she wants. That includes Gen. Schwarzkopf, the American hero of the Persian Gulf war.

The general will be on hand to greet the queen when she arrives at MacDill Air Force Base in Tampa, Fla., headquarters for the U.S. Central Command. Other stops on her itinerary are Miami and, in Texas, Austin, Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, home of the Alamo.

At the end of her official trip, the queen, still an avid horsewoman at age 65, will travel to Kentucky to see her brood mares. Her husband will return to England.

Buckingham Palace has refused to divulge details of the Kentucky leg of the trip, saying it will be a private affair. In the past, however, the queen has visited Will Farish, a wealthy oil man who entertains Mr. Bush at a turkey shoot every year.

In Washington, the queen will mix formality with fun.

On the floor of the House, she'll deliver a speech on the British-American relationship that "will be short but substantive," Mr. Price said.

The queen will get a crash course in the Great American Pastime — baseball — when she attends a Baltimore Orioles game with Mr. Bush. Baseball is as foreign to the British as cricket is to Americans.

The queen's last official visit was in 1983 when she ate lunch with then-President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, at their ranch in the mountains outside Santa Barbara, Calif. That visit was marred by a freak storm that pounded California.

Hey, queenie, our town's got

An Open Letter from the People of Baltimore to Queen Elizabeth of England:

Your Royal Hon-ness
How was your trip across the Atlantic? We go dainty ayshin alla time, natchery, which gets me to my point: Coming to Baltimore must be just like coming home for you. Like you got cricket, you got baseball, which is where we'll see yis tomorrow night at the ballpark.

Everybody around here is feeling a little self-conscious about your visit, what with you being so cultured and all, but that's silly. Han, we got tons of stuff in common. For instance, in your country you speak English, and in this city we speak a pretty close approximation to it.

Take Mimi DiPietro, for example. He's a city councilman from East Baltimore, who once said, "I'll never lie to you, if I have to lie to you, I'll debate from you."

See what I mean? Your country has a history of great speakers, but so does this city. Winston Churchill once said, "We shall fight them on the beaches."

Big boy, we have Gov. William Donald Schaefer, who once went to the beach at Ocean City and told the Veterans of Foreign Wars, "A strong military is the best deterrent against war." He must have been thinking about the Tide coming in, if you get my drift!

See what I'm saying, your hon-ness? There's more that unites us than divides us. You have a thousand years of civility, and we have

for eagle deaths

By Liz Bowie

FMC Corp. agreed yesterday to stop selling a crop pesticide in Maryland and nine other coastal states that has been blamed for the deaths of more than a dozen bald eagles in the Chesapeake Bay region.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency negotiated a total ban on sales, effective Sept. 1, in Maryland and other areas where there are breeding grounds and crucial habitat for bald eagles and migratory birds.

The company negotiated a settlement with the EPA that calls for a three-year phasing out of the use of carbofuran granules nationwide.

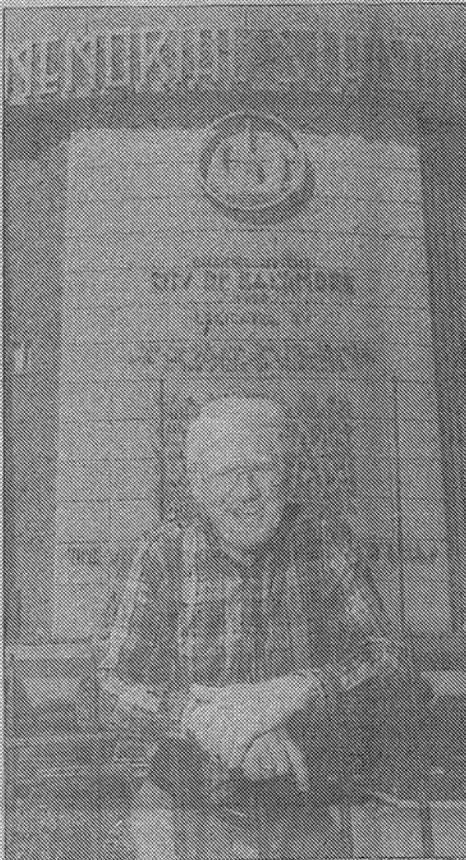

The EPA had proposed banning carbofuran two years ago and was on the verge of announcing an outright ban this spring, according to spokesman Al Heier. But EPA officials decided to negotiate an agreement because the company could have appealed and kept the product on the market for years, he said.

FMC is the only manufacturer of carbofuran, which is sold under the trade name Furadan. It is widely used by farmers in the state, particularly on corn. However, farmers have a number of alternatives, according to FMC spokesman Jeff Isenby. The order calls for the gradual reduction of sales of the product to distributors. Distributors and farmers will face some restrictions on the sale or use of existing stocks of carbofuran.

Birds are poisoned when they mistake the granules, spread on freshly plowed fields each spring, for food. Larger birds, such as eagles, are poisoned when they eat smaller birds and animals that die of carbofuran ingestion.

The Chesapeake Bay area's bald eagle population has been recovering nicely since its dramatic decline three decades ago from DDT poisoning. DDT was banned in 1972.

The EPA estimated in 1987 that

Guest at Hyatt to get $120,000
for needle scare

By Jonathan Bor

The Hyatt hotel chain has agreed to pay $120,000 to a man who claimed a hypodermic needle popped out of his bed and stabbed him in the leg three years ago — causing him a "nightmare" of worry that he contracted the AIDS virus.

Kenneth Bresler, a New York lawyer who checked into the Hyatt Regency in downtown Baltimore, said yesterday that he was so frightened about the prospect of contracting the deadly virus that he had himself tested about six times during the two years that followed the incident.

He tested negative each time, making it highly unlikely that traces of the human immunodeficiency virus entered his bloodstream and placed him at risk for developing AIDS. But he said, "I can tell you it was a nightmare. It was incredibly stressful."

Mr. Bresler, 35, said he wanted to put the incident behind him and refused to comment further. His lawyer, Gary Strassberg, said his client sued Hyatt for "the mental anguish he and his wife suffered, particularly those first few months as a result of fearing he might have contracted AIDS."

The case was scheduled for trial yesterday in U.S. District Court in Baltimore, but Judge Marvin J. Garber dismissed the jury after learning that the case had been settled. The case was settled Friday night, according to Mr. Strassberg.

Mr. Bresler checked into the hotel during a business trip Sept. 21, 1988. When he pulled back the covers to retire for the night, his lawyer said, the action somehow dislodged a hypodermic needle that bounced out of his bed, stabbed him in the calf and fell to the floor. The needle drew a small trickle of blood.

"What he learned was that the previous night, the Hyatt staff found a number of hypodermic needles all over the room," Mr. Strassberg said. "The room was in a totally disheveled state. There was some kind of drug party going on." While cleaning the room, the staff must have overlooked a needle that lay hidden in the bed, he said.

Hyatt's lawyer, Matthew Kastanin of Rockville, could not be reached for comment.

After the incident, Mr. Bresler placed the needle in a plastic bag and returned to New York, where he submitted it to a laboratory for analysis. The lab didn't find any traces of HIV but did find particles of cocaine — a substance that is commonly used by drug dealers to cut cocaine.

Intravenous drug use is one of the most common pathways for the spread of HIV.

News Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A couple of very British tourists will arrive here today to do the usual tourist thing — look at old buildings, visit graveyards, address Congress and go to a formal dinner at the White House.

This is what happens to all British tourists named Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II of the United Kingdom and assorted other realms, and her royal consort, Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh.

But enough of all that royal stuff, let's get to the good part of what's happening on the queen's six-day trip to Washington, Florida and Texas: Will the queen, as rumored, be bringing with her the mother of all knighthoods for Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf? And if so, what will they call him? Sir H?

A Buckingham Palace spokesman gave this most British of replies: "An announcement will be made when we make it if one is to be made." The queen will meet the general next Monday near Tampa.

Quickly changing topics, the spokesman graciously let it be known that "this will be the first time that the queen and Prince Philip have gone to a baseball match."

They will be taken tomorrow to the Oakland-Baltimore game in Baltimore, where they will be instructed in the art of baseball by the world's most famous college first baseman, George Bush.

It could not be learned whether the queen was considering knighting Rickey Henderson, too. Despite persistent questioning by your Daily News, it also could not be learned whether the queen was miffed that she would not be able to fulfill her secret wish to be a mystery guest on "The Bud Harrelson Report."

Other than that, there will be "a lot of heavyweight engagements" for the queen, such as her address to a joint session of Congress Thursday and a state dinner at the White House tonight — to which Washington Mayor Sharon Pratt Dixon has been told that she cannot bring a date. Last month, Sylvester Stallone brought a date to the White House. Go figure.

The queen, no doubt, is thrilled that she is going to meet "leading figures in Florida" on her visit.

The Royal Visit of H.M. Queen Elizabeth II and H.R.H. Duke of Edinburgh

First State Visit Since the Seventies Begins in Washington Today

By Linda Stroh

This morning the United States welcomes Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and His Royal Highness The Duke of Edinburgh. Americans may have difficulty with the protocol, figuring out which title goes with which personage, but Americans have very little difficulty recognizing the Royal Family. Most Americans look forward to the occasion — the pomp and circumstance — that will accompany the Royal Couple throughout their first State Visit to the United States since 1976.

The Queen's arrival this morning in Washington marks a juncture in relations between the United States and Great Britain that has never been closer. In virtually every aspect of the relationship, from foreign policy and trade to investment and cultural cross fertilization, the ties have never been deeper nor the volume of interchange greater.

U.S.-British cooperation in Desert Storm was the culmination of a decade of synergy in foreign policy, and both the Queen and Prince Philip will pay personal visits to recently returned troops, view USAF and RAF demonstrations, and meet General Schwarzkopf during their stay in Texas. Doubtless their comments and private conversations will reflect the public statements made throughout the Iraq crisis and the war of the solidarity of purpose, ethics, and commitment to democracy which Americans and British alike define as the real victory of the war.

In business, Britain is the number one foreign investor in the United States. At the same time, Britain is the number two location for U.S. direct investment, and has steadily closed the gap on the leader, Canada. From 1980 to 1989, U.S. manufacturing investment in the U.K. grew by a full 87 percent from $39 billion to $82 billion.

In many instances, a British name is synonymous with an American product, especially British or American. However, it is the British-French products, such as Darker spices, Vaseline and G-Lips are totally Americanized and the Minnesota company Pillsbury is ultimately owned by Grand Met, a British holding company. In Britain, the Ford is virtually a domestic car.

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and His Royal Highness The Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh.

U.S. media. From "Breakfast at Wimbledon," where millions of Americans watch the Duchess of Kent present the coveted trophy, to the almost daily coverage of the Prince of Wales, Lady Diana, and the Duchess of York in the tabloids, Americans show a fascination with the House of Windsor that rivals that of the average Brit.

Although President Bush extended an invitation to the Queen several months ago, in fact at the July 1988 NATO summit, the timing could not be more opportune. Recognition of British contributions to the Commonwealth and the State visit was always the reaffirmation of the close ties and importance of the British-U.S. relationship. The Gulf War makes the reaffirmation that much more timely and significant. "We stood by the U.S. right from the beginning over the Gulf, just as you stood by us over the Falklands," said the Queen's spokeswoman. "State visits

Letter from the British Ambassador

I am very glad to contribute to this special section of The Washington Post, marking the visit of Her Majesty The Queen and His Royal Highness The Duke of Edinburgh to The United States. It promises to be a truly memorable occasion, as well as the State Visit to Washington DC, which has not visited since the 20th anniversary of American Independence in 1976. The Queen and Prince Philip will also have official programmes in Florida and Texas.

This is an exciting event for all of us who care for the close relationship between the United States and the United Kingdom. I am especially impressed by the depth and variety of the links between our two countries. Our two peoples enjoy working together. And best, I believe, benefit from this exchange. At governmental levels, there is the closest cooperation as, together, we seek to enhance international peace, stability and freedom. We have seen this most recently in our joint involvement in Iraq: the liberation of Kuwait, and now the protection of Kurdish refugees in Northern Iraq. But beyond government there is also a great web of other contacts which reflect our common ties of language and culture. Britain is by some way the leading investor in the United States, and nearly 40 percent of U.S. investments in the European Community has come to Britain. There is constant exchange between — to name a few — universities, nations and musicians, our colleges and universities, our doctors and our lawyers. And we must remember too the millions who cross the Atlantic each year on holiday, whether to London or New York, Scotland or California.

I know that The Queen and Prince Philip are greatly enjoying their visit to the United States, as many people have testified both in Washington and throughout the States. American Dishes, our Royal Household, and whether in the more state occasions or casual or the smaller

City puts out carpet for queen

By Merne Morris Hammons
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Washington seemingly can't get enough of royalty and the biggest name in the game arrives today: Queen Elizabeth II.

The red carpet is out for the queen and husband Prince Philip, as are all the stops. And true to Washington form, the English monarch's official visit was preceded by a month of breast-beating and back-biting over who got invited to what and who didn't rate a single "stuffy" (as the Brits call invitations).

The London Daily Telegraph reports that State Department staff are determined there must be no mishap to equal the gaffe in 1976 when President Ford whirled the queen around the White House dance floor as the band struck up "The Lady Is a Tramp."

Aside from the chance to pull on the white gloves and straw hats that Americans so rarely get to show off, the royal visit does have a serious underlying purpose: It reinforces the "special relationship" between Great Britain and the United States.

As Jocelyn Nadon of the British Embassy's information office says, "We're best friends."

To stress these ties, the queen will address a joint session of Congress — a first for an English monarch. And with Queen Elizabeth's sense of history and occasion, she'll be very pleased to do it, says Roland Flamini, author of the recently published "Sovereign."

The royal duo will be in this country for 13 days, spending four in Washington before going on to Florida and Texas, states new to the queen. Then they're off for a private weekend with the queen's horses in the Richard England Chubhouse, a new Police Boys and Girls Club at 4103 Benning Road NE. Accompanied by first lady Barbara Bush and Mayor Sharon Pratt Dixon, the queen will tour classes and watch demonstrations of double-dutch jump roping, karate and basketball. (To ensure a warm welcome, the kids get the day off.)

Elizabeth then travels eight blocks to Drake Place, near East Capitol and 53rd streets SE, to be greeted by Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp and see four new homes built by the Marshall Heights Community Development Organization. She'll meet the families that, for the first time, were able to buy homes. And they'll have a chance to thank her for the small housewarming gifts the British Embassy will have dropped off shortly before.

Meanwhile Philip, captain-general of the Royal Marines, heads to Quantico to watch a counter-terrorist demonstration and meet U.S. Marines who were deployed in the Persian Gulf. Given that Philip is a manly sort who often curses, in part because he thinks it makes him

Kentucky. (Her mares originally were sent there for breeding as a security-conscious alternative to Ireland, but she now thoroughly enjoys her visits to the farm of Will Farish.)

Queen Elizabeth turned 65 last month, but she hasn't slowed down. She'll make 14 appearances in her four days in Washington, in an itinerary designed to get her out in front of people — both here and in Great Britain.

These tours are grueling, and the queen's staff wants her subjects (read taxpayers) back home to see just how well she does her job. So the observant will notice a cameraman and soundman dogging her every step. The team that shot the 1968 documentary "The Royal Family" were pulled out of retirement to make a second installment.

And so the rush starts.

The queen and her husband were to arrive about 10 a.m. today at An-

Mount Vernon Ladies Association

The young queen visits Mount Vernon in 1951.

draws Air Force Base aboard the Concorde. She rarely takes commercial flights, though lesser Windsors do so all the time. (Which is a mixed bag for fellow travelers: Insiders say such flights inevitably are delayed because of intense security, but they're safe as can be and passengers arrive in a jolly mood since free drinks are handed out to make up for the delay.)

Today, the queen dispenses with many official obligations. From Andrews she and Philip go directly to the White House, where she and President Bush will make a few remarks before having lunch. She'll present him with the Churchill Award and plant a tree on the South Lawn.

From there, she heads to Arlington National Cemetery to place a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns. Then she rests for a few hours before dressing for the state dinner tonight at the White House.

The White House staff is customarily tight-lipped about preparations. But given warm relations between the nations and the fact that the president and queen are distant relatives, the East Wing staff likely is trying hard. For the queen's sake, White House watchers hope they'll muster a more lively guest list than those for some recent state dinners, when "Wheel of Fortune" host Pat Sajak was the glitziest invitee.

With official duties out of the way, tomorrow the queen mingles with the people — in her own way. That doesn't mean she'll leap out of her Rolls and press the flesh a la Gorbachev.

She'll start her day in the other Washington — a crime-ridden area nicknamed "Dodge City." First stop, seem like one of the guys, he should fit right in.

The couple then reunite to attend a luncheon for 300 at the Library of Congress, featuring dishes once served by Thomas Jefferson. Held in honor of the Festival of British Film and Television at nearby Union Station, guests will include such film luminaries as Richard and David Attenborough, Ben Kingsley, John Mills and Martin Scorsese.

Tomorrow afternoon, the queen gets to return all that hospitality in a big way. She's giving a garden party for 1,800 at the British Embassy, where a select few will be brought forward to shake her gloved hand.

After a quick spot of tea in the garden, Elizabeth and Philip head to Baltimore to catch the Orioles. Mr. Flaminio predicts this will not be a high point: The queen knows and cares little about most sports. But the game long has been sold out; a block of 300 seats was sold to Irish protesters.

If tomorrow's theme is everyday people, Thursday's must be history. The queen gets an early start, arriving at the Folger Shakespeare Library and Theatre at 10 a.m. to watch a scene from the current production of "King Lear" and see a children's play.

Then it's on to the Capitol to address the joint session of Congress, followed by lunch with House Speaker Thomas Foley.

The next stop is Mount Vernon, which the queen last visited in 1951, three months before her father died and she ascended the throne. She'll lay a wreath on George Washington's tomb and dedicate a new wharf on the Potomac before leaving by boat.

Thursday evening she is hostess again, giving a reciprocal dinner at the British Embassy. There's no doubt this is the most desirable invite of the queen's visit.

Friday morning the royal couple arrives at Washington Cathedral around 10:30 for a brief prayer service and tour. Then it's back to Andrews for a Concorde flight to Florida and more of the same.

For royal watchers, embassy staff recommend catching a glimpse of the queen at the Folger Library, the Library of Congress, Mount Vernon (where regular admission will be charged) or Washington Cathedral.

But if you'd like a dose of Merrie Olde England without standing behind a rope on a sidewalk, the Library of Congress' Mary Pickford Theater and the AMC Union Station are the sites of the fairly exhaustive British film and television festival.

Meanwhile, the Biograph in Georgetown continues with its British animation festival today and tomorrow. And through Friday, Loew's L'Enfant Plaza (where Monaco's royal family always stays while in Washington) serves tea — complete with "Di's Devonshire scones" and "Fergie's fruit tarts."

Throwing a party, a benefit, some sort of soiree? Keep us clued in! Send your invitations to Marrie Morris Hammons, Society Editor, Washington Times, 3600 New York Ave. NE, Washington, D.C. 20002. Or call 636-3228

The queen? Well, skip to my loo!

HER MAJESTY'S BYPASS OF Gotham via Concorde for Washington today certainly leaves New York eating D.C.'s dust on the royal visit of Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip.

However, our town will be represented by philanthropist Milton Petrie, his wife, Carroll, and fashion designer Arnold Scaasi at the White House State Dinner that President and Mrs. Bush are hosting tonight.

The trio boards the Petries' jet this afternoon and will return after tonight's do. Of course, it only makes sense for Carroll to pack a Scaasi number for the occasion. It'll be the same pink and white dress she wore when the Petrie Court at the Metropolitan Museum of Art opened a while back. God save all recycled frocks.

And will Barbara Bush don a Scaasi for the grand affair?

"I haven't a clue what Mrs. Bush will wear," said Scaasi, the First Lady's frequent designer-of-choice, "but I hope it will be [something of] mine."

As much as the royal trip isn't a New York story, it doesn't seem to be shaping up as much of a Houston story, either, although the royals arrive there a week from today.

By all accounts, it appears Houston's high society hasn't been asked to any of the functions the queen and her consort will attend. Could the royals be snubbing Houston's Gilded Set so the queen can avoid international socialite Lynn Wyatt, who is based there?

Nothing personal against Lynn, mind you. It's just the British press hasn't yet dropped stories that allege

Milton Petrie
He has just the jet for the fete

Fergie, Duchess of York, had a romantic fling with Lynn's handsome son Steve Wyatt. Pictures of the Queen greeting Lynn Wyatt would incite a riot among Fleet St. flacks.

In fact, more evidence of how fascinated the British are with Wyatt and Fergie can be found in the June issue of Tatler, the British glossy. Wyatt is outraged by a profile of himself that appears in the magazine, and had this disclaimer attached: "Steve Wyatt would like to point out that he had no idea that Christa D'Souza [the reporter] was Tatler's editor at large when he sat next to her at dinner, and did not cooperate with this article."

Anyway, Texas' premiere society columnist Maxine Mesinger, thinks the aforementioned Tatler is probably nothing but a bunch of tumbleweed blowing in the wind.

"The problem is [the queen] was incensed by her last visit to L.A. when the Reagans were in office," opined Mesinger during a phone chat yesterday. "She was overexposed to the jet set there and this got her a lot of bad press back home. This time she wants to put a lid on it."

This royal trip to America certainly is no small feat. The queen's entourage is enormous.

"What -- you expected her to skip the tiaras herself?" The Washington Post asked yesterday.

The D.C. paper reported that Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip will arrive with 40 retainers, just about a dozen shy of the number Madonna took to the film festival in Cannes.

The 40 include two maids, a hairdresser, a doctor, six footmen and a valet for Prince Philip. "They will bring anywhere from one to six tons of luggage for the 10-day visit, including the queen's two standing wardrobes on wheels, portable chest of clothes, leather trunks and a special trunk for a state gown," says The Washington Post's Roxanne Roberts.

The queen packs mourning clothes in the event of a royal death, crates of bottled Malvern water, crossword puzzles, duck-leather pillows and "50 pints of HIV-tested matching blood plasma, now standard procedure for all the royal family."

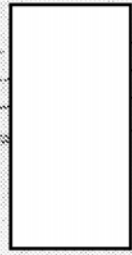

Although unconfirmed, it is believed her majesty travels with her own white kidakin toilet seat.

"No one's ever seen it," says royalty writer Margaret Holder. "The thing is, every toilet seat she ever sits on is scrupulously cleaned -- if not newly built. If it's true, it must be carried by a lady-in-waiting in a case."

Will royals hang around for 7th-inning stretch?

Washington
Queen Elizabeth's desire to see a baseball game will require a short detour out of Washington during her four-day state visit, which begins today, a Buckingham Palace spokesman said. But, he added, "the queen and Prince Philip are very happy to be going to Baltimore."

The queen had asked that her schedule during the U.S. visit be "varied," according to her spokesman, and include such informal events as tomorrow night's Orioles vs. Oakland Athletics game at Memorial Stadium "to enable her to see aspects of American life she hasn't seen before."

Attending a baseball game, he said, "was one of several imaginative proposals that emerged between London and Washington."

And just how much of the game will the royal couple, accompanied by their host President Bush, actually watch?

"You'll have to wait and see," said her press secretary.

See QUEEN, SC, Col. 3

Ballgame answers queen's wish

QUEEN, from 1C

It may depend on just how enamored the 65-year-old monarch becomes of the wondrous sound of bat against ball and the inimitable splendor of the ballpark frank.

Such aspects of American life, after all, will be new to her. Indeed, said the British spokesman, "This is the first time she's been to a baseball match."

Greeting her at the stadium will be Baltimore Mayor Kurt L. Schmoke. The mayor and his wife, Patricia, are also among the 1,800 "prominent Americans" invited to a garden party at the British Embassy in Washington.

Mr. Schmoke "thinks the invitation is a tribute to the city and he is honored to represent the city at this event," said Clint Coleman, the mayor's spokesman. Mr. Schmoke, however, would not reveal what topics he might raise with the queen should they get a chance to exchange more than pleasantries.

The mayor said it would be rude of him to say it to the press before he says it to the queen," Mr. Coleman said with a laugh.

Hail, and Thunder, to the Queen!

At the White House, Letting Bygones Be Bygones

By Donna Padcliffe and Roxanne Roberts
Washington Post Staff Writers

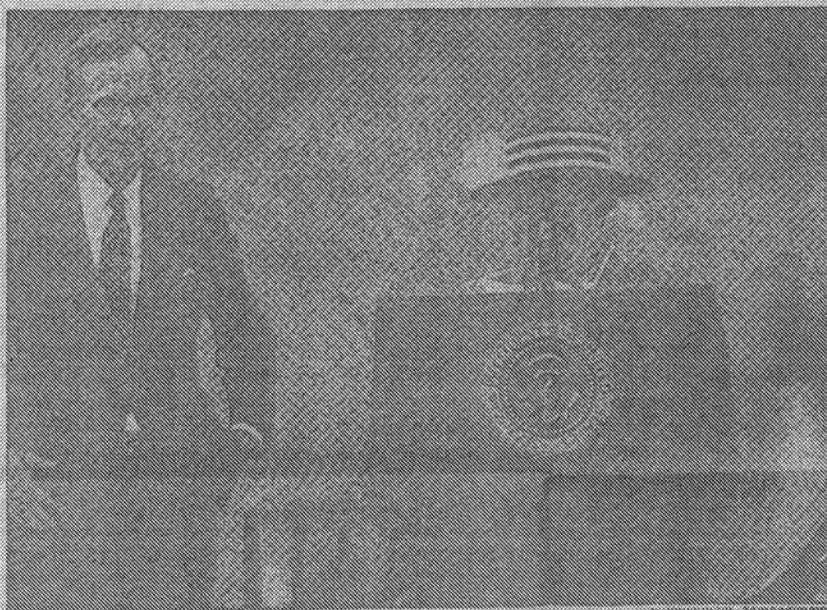

"America is lost" wrote King George III two centuries ago. But last night, making her fourth visit and her fourth toast "in the very place" where another George—her father—proposed a toast to President Roosevelt in 1939, Queen Elizabeth II let it be known that there are no hard feelings.

"No wonder I cannot feel a stranger here," she told President Bush and a stellar crowd of 130 guests at a White House dinner in her honor. "The British have never felt America to be a foreign land."

We almost weren't, President Bush noted in his toast. "I sometimes wonder if I'd be standing here today if it weren't for a horse farmer named Paul Kenner."

She may not be our queen but any visit, state or otherwise, creates quite a stir in columns. No one else combines the aura, the majesty and the wealth of this 65-year-old grandmother. Standing at the North Entrance as the Union Jack fluttered along

And then, after the talking-hot embarrassment with the lectern on the South Lawn of the White House, everything changed.

Queen Elizabeth II, this fancy cartoon, this unpolished relic in white gloves, this corp-bitten defender of an ill-behaved faith, the walking logo for a country that looks like a theme park with riots, this highness, this majesty drove across the Potomac River, got out of her limousine at the Tomb of the Unknowns and Nature herself was estranged.

Thunder roiled neatly through the playing of "God Save the Queen," cracked at just the right points in "The Star-Spangled Banner" ("... the rockets' red glare... MA-BOOM") and then a rain that seemed as much necessary as weather till as she walked between the tall trees and the huge soldiers in the rain. She carried her own umbrella, one of those touches that in a scene of English royalty seems miraculous, somehow. Look! She brought the Mink! She carries her own umbrella!

The Army had cranked up a "Full Honor Wreath Ceremony," known among the soldiers of Fort Belvoir as "No Kill and a Thank

The British Press, Feasting On Tidbits

By Howard Kurtz
Washington Post Staff Writer

Peter McKey, correspondent for the London Evening Standard, was sipping a beer yesterday and chucking over Queen Elizabeth II's welcome at the White House, an mauspicious debut in which a thicket of microphones obscured all of the diminutive monarch except her hat.

"We're quite excited about the queen's talking hat," he said. "That's the lead for the tabloids."

"The short and tall of it is the queen was not up to the job," cracked Philip Finn, the Daily Express man, ordering another chardonnay at the Sheraton-Carlton bar.

"It's really quite extraordinary," Finn said. "After two years of very careful planning, someone forgot to bring a soapbox for her to stand on."

From the august Times of London to Rupert Murdoch's scrappy Sun, the vicars of the British press seized on the rare royal gaffe to even up what most regard as a rather ho-hum state visit. McKey was especially thrilled when Prince Philip shot him a look.

"He glared at me," McKey said. "He loathes the press. He despises what is known in London as the reptiles."

These sithering fellows even have an official nickname, the "royal rat pack." The 30 or so reporters follow the family around the globe, recording every tidbit, from the queen's practice of carrying her own drinking water on all trips to frenzied speculation about the state of Princess Diana's marriage.

"It's like feeding a monster; you can never provide enough," said Tom Corby of the British Press Association. "It's a fascination people have with the royal family—a life which to them is unattainable, unbelievably privileged. . . . You're writing contemporary history."

For the veterans who just finished last week's trip to Czechoslovakia by Prince Charles and Princess Diana, the First Couple of tabloid soap operadom, covering a 65-year-old queen is not the same cup of tea.

"Princess Di is probably one of the most beautiful women in the world," said Sun photographer Arthur Edwards, who scored some of the earliest bikini-clad shots. "Whatever she wears is a picture in itself. The queen is a bit more staid. She is formality itself."

Said Margaret Hall, a reporter for the newspaper Today: "It's going to be a tough job to get a picture of the queen on the front page—not unless her knickers fall down."

Still, Her Majesty's trip has not gone unnoticed in London.

"Queen's Arrival Puts US in a Tizz," the Independent announced. "As always, the hunt for trivia is uppermost. . . . Attention is directed where it really matters: to her 40 retainers and flunkys, to the 'up to six tons' of royal luggage, and a selection of up to 20 tiaras. . . ."

Edwards says Americans seem transfixed by the royal road show "because you don't have a family like it here. If you hadn't kicked us out 200 years ago, you'd probably have a Duchess of Dallas or a Prince of New York."

The clash of cultures is apparent in the briefing room at the Sheraton-Carlton, where impossibly handsome British spokesmen say absolutely nothing of substance, but sound terribly cultured doing so. When an American TV crew showed up for a background briefing Monday, they were quickly given the boot.

"Absolutely no pictures," explained British Embassy spokesman Michael Price. "The palace doesn't do anything on camera. It's a very different ballgame from the way you do it here. I'm afraid."

The Brits delighted in peppering the palace spokesman, who under the ground rules could not be identified, with questions about rumors that the queen would confer knighthood on Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf.

"We never comment on honors before an announcement is made," the spokesman sniffed.

"Was it her expressed wish to meet with General Schwarzkopf?"

"She is looking forward very much to meeting General Schwarzkopf." And so on.

At one end of the Fleet Street spectrum are the racy tabloids. When a security guard once briefly barred the queen from the Royal Windsor Horse Show ("I thought she was some old dear who had got lost") he found himself lambasted as a "bungler" on the Sun's front page. When Prince Charles warned that cars are polluting the Earth's environment, the Sun headline read "Charles Sends Gas Guzzling Bentley to Prague," gleefully relating how a chauffeur was dispatched 800 miles so the prince's car would be waiting in Czechoslovakia.

At the other extreme is Majesty magazine, which recently ran a photo spread on how the queen's clothes are made. "We don't write unkind pieces," says Editor Ingrid Seward. "We asked if we could write an article about the queen's fashion and she said she didn't mind as long as she could check the article herself. It came back to me with the spelling corrected."

At yesterday's briefing, the Brits were having a jolly old time as the unidentified spokesman gamely insisted that the failure to elevate the queen at the White House podium was less than an international incident. "I don't think it was anything that bothered the queen a-tall," he said.

But hadn't President Bush failed to press a button that would have produced a step for Her Majesty to stand on?

"If I were you I'd talk to the White House about any particular technology of that kind," the spokesman said.

A Royal Hug, Mug of Beer And Baseball

The queen got a hug, the prince got a beer, and a lot of average Americans got a look at real royalty yesterday on Day 2 of Her Majesty's visit to the United States.

At the Richard England Clubhouse in Southeast Washington, Queen Elizabeth II, along with Barbara Bush and Mayor Sharon Pratt Dixon, watched local kids show off their karate, rope jumping and basketball skills.

Meanwhile, Prince Philip was reviewing the troops at Quantico, the U.S. Marine Corps base. There he chatted with the troops about the 12-day jungle exercise they were in the midst of. "You'll get a bath next week," he said.

Alice Frazier of Southeast Washington welcomed the queen with literally open arms and a warm "How are you doing?"

At a Library of Congress luncheon, it was so hot that Prince Philip startled the waiters by asking for a beer. Later, 1,500 Anglophiles braved the heat to mingle with the royal couple at a British Embassy garden party. And last night the Windsors headed off to Baltimore with baseball fan George Bush for two innings of the Orioles game.

2 Super Bowls in Hand,
Giants' Parcells ResignsBy Mike Freeman
Washington Post Staff Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J., May 15—Bill Parcells, one of the most successful professional football coaches over the last eight years and a two-time Super Bowl winner, stepped down as coach of the New York Giants today.

Parcells, 49, will be replaced by Ray Handley, 46, one of his closest friends, who was promoted to offensive coordinator only three weeks ago. Handley hinted he will retain that job.

Parcells, who in January coached the Giants to a 20-19 win over the Buffalo Bills in Super Bowl XXV, said: "What will I miss the most? On the road in Washington and on the road in [Philadelphia]. The fans there hate me so much they like me."

News of Parcells' resignation came as a surprise to most Giants players. Although rumors persisted about him leaving for a job at NBC Sports, many, including General

NFL Moves Toward Expansion

Baltimore Among Candidates for 2 Teams That May Be Added in '94

By Mark Asher
Washington Post Staff Writer

A National Football League committee chaired by Commissioner Paul Tagliabue yesterday recommended adding two teams for the 1994 season, the clearest indication yet the NFL will expand for the first time since 1976.

The recommendation of the eight-member Realignment and Expansion Committee, which met for three hours yesterday and includes the chairman of seven other owners' committees, is expected to be ratified at a two-day owners meeting starting next Wednesday in Minneapolis.

Former NFL cities Baltimore and St. Louis, as well as Charlotte, N.C., are expected to be among the leading candidates for the two franchises, which are expected to cost more than $100 million each—though a league spokesman said no price has been established. If the NFL follows past procedures, as expected, the cities will be selected first and then the ownership groups will be chosen by the current owners, said Joe Browne, a league vice president.

The two expansion cities are expected to be chosen by fall of 1992.

In baseball, the National League Expansion Committee is considering six cities—including Washington—each with its own established ownership group.

The NFL committee also recommended a realignment into six divisions of five teams each, also for the 1994 season.

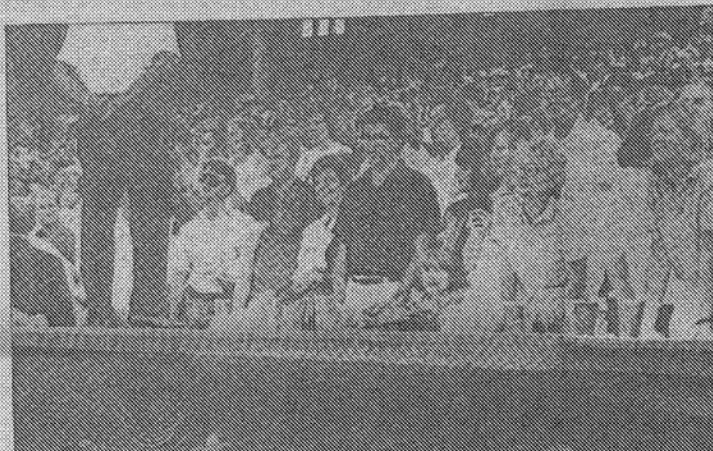

Expanding in 1994 represents a one-year pushback from the timetable Tagliabue announced in January 1990 when he first spoke of his intentions to name a committee to study realignment and expansion. But 1994 is better than 1993 for

Athletics Take Advantage of Errors, 6-3

By Mark Asher
Washington Post Staff Writer

BALTIMORE, May 15—The Baltimore Orioles' royal foul-ups outnumbered their majestic home runs tonight, meaning that a night for monarchs and presidents and red carpets ended with another routine defeat—this time 6-3 to the Oakland Athletics before 32,596 at Memorial Stadium.

Among those onlookers—albeit briefly—were President Bush and England's Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip. Had the two remained beyond the first few innings, the queen's introduction to baseball runs faster than they could score them.

The A's turned a first-inning walk by Baltimore starter Jeff Ballard and a pair of third-inning errors into an early two-run lead, and the Orioles (11-19) never could draw even thereafter. That made a loser of Ballard, who has been on the mound for one of Baltimore's 17 losses this season (including two tonight).

Vance Law and Dave Henderson each had three of Oakland's 13 hits, and Lance Blenkinship had two. Milligan and Worthington provided two hits apiece for Baltimore, but the Orioles were left frustrated

COURTLAND MILLOY

The Queen Is White, The Pawns Are Black

The purpose of Queen Elizabeth II's visit to Southeast Washington yesterday may have been noble, but I couldn't get past the symbolism of white royalty being whisked in to see how native blacks live.

The queen said she wanted to see the four low-income houses built by the progressive Marshall Heights Community Development Organization, and maybe she will push for similar projects once she returns to England.

But more powerful than her politics was the perception of her whiteness as the stuff of royalty, wealth and respect. To understand this, picture the audience of black children who came out to greet her, including many little girls.

They knew nothing of the royal family's efforts—particularly Prince Charles's—to hobnob with ordinary people as an antidote to inherent aloofness.

Nor did they know that the queen is really here to thank President Bush for his role in what many blacks considered a racist war against Iraq.

All they knew was that they used to walk to school amid the lush grass and weeds that covered the vacant, trash-strewn lots in their neighborhood. Bad things happened to children in those weeds because there was no police presence to protect the youngsters.

Then, this woman arrived. She was no prettier than their mothers. No more regal and certainly no fancy dresser. In fact, she was just a plain Jane, everyday-looking woman. But for her, a police officer was stationed on every corner and metal detectors were erected in the streets.

"She doesn't even wear a crown," LaToya Johnson, 7, said.

"Or a cape," her classmate, Constance Williams, 6, said.

"Maybe she uses a magic wand like in the fairy tales," Wilma Washington, 5, said. But the other girls sensed nothing supernatural. "I doubt it," LaToya said.

As far as the girls could see, all the queen had going for her was whiteness. It was the only thing that made her different from the women to whom nobody paid much attention—their black mothers, grandmothers and aunts. Black women who live in the Marshall Heights neighborhood said they were sometimes threatened by drug dealers and verbally and physically abused. But the threats were not taken seriously.

Until the white queen arrived. "About a month ago, strange things started happening out here," said Blanche Pegram, who has lived in the neighborhood for 27 years. "Policemen on motor scooters started riding through. Then we started getting night patrols."

Many attempts had been made to get the city to cut the weeds and sweep the streets. But the city rarely took action. It took a visit from the queen to get the job done.

"They were out here every morning," said Nancy Turk, a retired teacher who lives in the neighborhood. "My street would be clean, and they'd still come by and sweep it some more."

The unprecedented activity added mightily to the queen's persona as a woman of importance. But the children had no idea what she had done to deserve it.

"You are born to be a queen," Diane Rodgers, a third grade teacher at Harris Elementary School, told some of her students. "How would you like to have someone at your beck and call?"

For those children, Queen Elizabeth was the only person they had ever seen treated this way. And deep down, they had to wonder why their mothers weren't afforded equal respect.

Their mothers worked harder than the queen, paid taxes and attended civic meetings, but still hadn't been able to get drug dealers off their streets—until this white woman came along, billed as the epitome of cleanliness because she carried her own purified water and a personalized toilet seat.

For her, the garbage was removed.

This was the kind of phenomenon, I believe, that has contributed to a startling turnabout in the way black children perceive themselves. A recent update on a famous study conducted by Kenneth Clark in the 1950s shows black girls once again preferring white dolls to black dolls.

Forty years ago, the study found, black girls wanted white dolls; but by the mid-1970s, at the height of the black-pride movement, the choice had turned to black dolls.

By the mid-1980s, the situation had reversed itself, with black girls preferring white dolls at rates surpassing the level of the 1950s.

Now came the queen, an occasion for which the little girls were scrubbed clean, outfitted in their finest clothes and taught to curtsy low and not speak until spoken to.

Better they should be taught to act like queens.

Queen, USA in a mutual embrace

From a baseball game to a bear hug, Her Majesty has a diverse Day 2

By Susan Wloszczyna
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — The queen got caught in a squeeze play Wednesday. And that was even before she entered Memorial Stadium in Baltimore.

While visiting a home in one of the poorer sections of the nation's capital, Queen Elizabeth II of England was royally hugged by Alice Frazier, 67. The breach of protocol — one shouldn't dare to THINK about touching the monarch, let alone bear-hug her — didn't faze Her Majesty too greatly. She smiled weakly and quickly pulled away.

"It was beautiful," said Frazier, a retired soda fountain worker. "I hugged her a little. She didn't mind."

Royal watchers, however, were horrified. It was page 1 news in London tabloids; one referred to it as "rib-crunching." No one could recall her having been hugged before.

The monarch, accompanied by first lady Barbara Bush and Mayor Sharon Pratt Dixon, had been forewarned to expect a welcoming embrace, a Frazier custom.

"I told her this was my palace," said Frazier of her modest three-bedroom house decorated with portraits of Jell-O.

Today's royal family schedule

Today is Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh's final full day in Washington, D.C., before leaving for Miami Friday. Here's a peek at their day.

- ▶ They visit the Folger Shakespeare Library on Capitol Hill.
- ▶ The queen addresses a joint session of Congress, and attends a lunch in the Capitol.
- ▶ The royals visit George Washington's family home — and tomb — at Mount Vernon.
- ▶ The couple hosts a dinner at the British Embassy in honor of President Bush.

Queen seems to like informality

the Kennedy brothers and Martin Luther King. She wasn't upset when the queen declined chicken, potato salad and iced tea. "She didn't have time."

Her Majesty didn't get to sample Frazier's acclaimed potato salad. But she got quite a taste of American culture on the second of her 13-day tour of the states. From an inner-city neighborhood to a baseball park, from a Library of Congress luncheon stacked with stars to an embassy garden party abloom with famous faces, the queen's plate was piled high.

Everywhere she went, crowds strained for a closer look, her trip feeding the USA's continued fascination with British royalty.

The queen "has the status of somebody who is not quite real," Chicago psychologist Kate Wachs said. "She is supernatural. When we are literally able to touch her, it is like having magic visited upon the common man."

As for the queen herself, observers say she appears to be having a jolly good time.

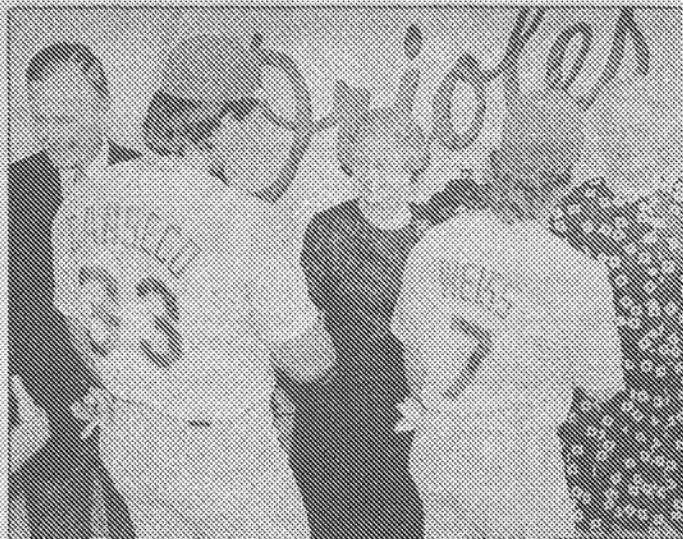

"She looks happier, more relaxed than she has recently. I think she likes the informality of the American people," noted Ingrid Seward, editor of Majesty magazine. A day in the life of visiting royalty:

► In the morning, the queen mingled with residents of Drake Place, a crime-plagued community. Her motorcade traveled down the flag-lined streets of the area that used to be called "Dodge City" because "people were dodging bullets from gun fights," explained Jack Kemp, secretary of housing and urban development. But he said crime had eased since a home ownership program — which has helped people like Frazier — started.

"We'll probably never get to England," said Dale Lewis, a substitute teacher keen to see the queen's jewels.

Unfortunately, the only jewelry apparent was a diamond and pearl brooch on her lady-like yellow-and-white dress.

► Her Majesty and her husband, Prince Philip, were 15 minutes late to a luncheon honoring British film and TV at the Library of Congress.

But as she walked the red carpet, nobody seemed to mind. Cameras clicked, drums rolled, people cheered. In return, they got that queenly wave.

Unlike the warmly human reception at the housing project, protocol here was strictly observed. Men bowed, ladies curtsied. They took the gloved one's hand only when offered.

"It is a bit pompous, isn't it?" said Angela Lansbury, the London-born star of TV's Murder, She Wrote who received a lifetime achievement award at the lunch. "But royalty is special."

Other stars on the 350-person guest list: Jane Fonda and Ted Turner, Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn, Richard and David Attenborough, Ben Kingsley and Stephanie Beacham, Michael York.

► Later during the warm afternoon, the queen kept her cool in a white hat, lace jacket and beige skirt as she strolled through the crowd of more than 1,000 — including media, business and government leaders — invited to the British Embassy garden party. The guests of honor: Vice President Dan Quayle and wife Marilyn.

She managed to impress the throng. "She looks you in the eye, listens attentively and really responds," said Shoshana Cardin of the Council of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations.

Harry Smith, CBS This Morning co-anchor, said Washington isn't excited by much, "but they're buzzing about this."

► Perhaps the Kansas City Royals would have been more her cup of tea, but the queen watched the Baltimore Orioles take on the Oakland A's for a couple of innings.

It was her first major-league baseball game, and a standing ovation greeted the queen and Bush as they stepped onto the diamond at twilight.

At a dugout gathering before the game, the players and the coaches rubbed elbows with the royalty. Said Oakland manager Tony LaRussa: "It's the best break we've caught all season, to be here when they were coming to a game."

Her Majesty received gifts for her six grandchildren: personalized baseball bats.

Among the fans in the stands for the historic occasion were Wayne Zawodny, 35, of Baltimore and son John, 11. Was John excited by the hoopla? "Nah, I just want to see the Orioles beat the A's."

Bushes' welcome fit for the queen

Dinner with the queen. Quite proper.

Tuesday's state dinner at the White House crowned Queen Elizabeth's first day of a three-day Washington stay.

Her Majesty, glittering in her diamonds and tiara, wore a white satin gown. Barbara Bush's entrance — in a beaded lavender dress by fave designer and guest Arnold Scaasi — was greeted with oohs and aahs.

Other guests: Angela Lansbury; designer Bill Blass with soprano Jessye Norman (who performed after dinner); Morgan Freeman, sporting gray stubble and an earring; Douglas Fairbanks Jr., wearing scads of medals the queen's father, George VI, had given him; Norman Schwarzkopf; and Robert and Georgette Mosbacher, in a Blass gown.

White peonies and lavender and hot pink roses decorated tables laden with lamb, lobster, cucumber mousse and dauphin potatoes.

During the gift-swapping custom after dinner, the Bushes presented the royals with a crystal bowl.

Soviet Debt, Economic Woes Grow

'Disaster' Possible, CIA Tells Congress; Loan Squeeze Looms

By Steven Malachuk
Washington Post Staff Writer

The Soviet Union needs $20 billion to $30 billion in foreign loans and credits this year, and as the country's overstated political and economic situation is making most Western banks and companies unwilling to extend it any new credit, according to International Monetary Fund officials.

The loans and credits are needed to support food and vital industrial equipment and to make payments on debts that are coming due and that Western banks and companies do not want to roll over into new loans.

That is, says a report by the International Monetary Fund, the Soviet Union's $40 billion in commercial debt comes due within a year, according to a report by Deutsche Bank, a major lender to the Soviets in the past, and the country's foreign exchange reserves have fallen to their lowest level in years.

Moreover, other sources say the Soviet Union's arrears on trade credits have reached $5 billion.

In Moscow yesterday, the Soviet government announced that it would like to sign the economic aide.

President Mikhail Gorbachev issued a decree lowering interest rates on loans and increasing incentives to receive foreign investment.

The decree, read on state television, and serves as a signal that the government is serious about reforming the economy, and that it is willing to make changes in the way it does business with the West.

It also gives some indication of the government's willingness to reduce its foreign debt.

Gorbachev's decree was issued hours after Soviet Prime Minister Yegor Gerasimov announced that leaders of the Soviet Union and 13 of the country's 15 republics had

In Hill Speech, Queen Hails U.S.-British Ties

By Helen Dewar
Washington Post Staff Writer

In the first address by a British monarch to the U.S. Congress, Queen Elizabeth II yesterday gave a warm, respectful response as she hailed the ties that exist between the United States and Britain and said her nation is committed to maintaining close relations between Europe and America.

Most of the symbolism of the moment, lawmakers, Cabinet members, military commanders and foreign diplomats stood behind and attentive as the monarch, brightly dressed, queen walked slowly into the House chamber with her husband, Prince Philip, and an escort of congressional leaders.

With only the faintest of smiles, she put them at ease from the start by raising her over the lectern from her perch on a small blue-carpeted platform supported by the House.

"I do hope you can see me today just where you are," she said.

This was a polite, royal way of referring to the fact that little more than her hat was visible over microphones when she was welcomed at the White House on Tuesday, according to reports in the British press of the "talked her."

The congressional crowd roared and gave her a standing ovation.

Without reference to the historic prescriptive conflict that separated Britain and its former colony 215 years ago, the queen spoke of the shared values of Britain and the United States, including democracy, stability and respect for what she described as the power that "comes from the barrel of a gun."

For the queen praised the U.S.-British cooperation in the Persian Gulf War, with a special " salute" to the "outstanding leadership of your president and the courage and prowess of the armed forces of the United States."

The United States and Britain viewed the long mission of Kuwait in the same way, "in courage to be reversed, both for the people of Kuwait and for the sake of the principle that ruled aggression cannot prevail," she said.

"Our views were identical and so were our objectives. That response was not without

Civil Rights Compromise Is Readied

House Democrats' Proposal Includes Controversial Cap

By Tom Kenworthy and Gary Lee
Washington Post Staff Writers

House Democratic leaders have agreed on the broad details of a compromise civil rights bill that will include a $150,000 cap on punitive damages in discrimination cases brought by women—an idea that is offensive to some liberal Democrats and women lawmakers.

The leadership's job discrimination proposal incorporates changes agreed to in negotiations between business leaders and representatives of civil rights groups, talks that were abandoned when it became clear the White House opposed a compromise.

Democratic leaders are to unveil the bill on Monday and hope the changes favorable to business will attract enough votes from conservative Democrats and moderate Republicans to withstand an attack by more liberal Democrats. They postponed a decision on what to put the bill to a vote until they are able to ship the compromise version across the aisle and the lawmakers.

The new bill will be offered as a substitute for a civil rights bill previously reported out of a House committee.

The measure is a tougher version of the anti-bias legislation passed last year by Bush, who claimed it would have led to the establishment of minority hiring quotas.

Last year's civil rights bill got 272 votes, 18 shy of the two-thirds necessary to overcome a presidential veto. The Senate failed to consider the veto by one vote.

risk, but we have both learned from history that we must not allow aggression to succeed."

More needs to be done, she said, alluding to allied efforts to protect Kurds and other minorities in Iraq and to achieve a broader peace in the Middle East. "If we succeed" in these efforts, "our military success will have achieved its true objective," she said.

The speech, written by British Embassy officials to reflect the views of the government now headed by Prime Minister John Major, also contained a gently worded warning against what she described as risk of "continental insularity" if Europe and America drift apart.

"Britain is at the heart of a growing movement towards greater cohesion within Europe" that is going to mean "radical economic, social and political evolution," she told the lawmakers.

Although she did not mention it, the United States is also at the heart of efforts to create another economic bloc in North America through free-trade agreements with Canada and Mexico.

"It is Britain's prime concern to ensure that the new Europe is open and liberal and that it works in growing harmony with the United States and other members of the Atlantic community," she said. "All our history in this and earlier centuries underlines the basic point that the best progress is made when Europeans and Americans act in concert. We must not allow ourselves to be enticed into a form of continental insularity."

Appearing before Congress on the third day of her visit to Washington, the queen, attired in a peach-colored dress and matching hat, was interrupted by applause seven times during her 15-minute address.

With her husband sitting in a special chair at her side, she peered almost inquisitively around the chamber before she spoke, forgoing the smiles and waves that are the trademarks of most addresses to joint meetings of the House and Senate.

Although British prime ministers—most recently Margaret Thatcher in 1985—have addressed Congress, British kings and queens have been conspicuously absent from the list of monarchs to speak on Capitol Hill.

The last was Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands in 1982.

The queen's gently regal appearance and the properly respectful response accorded her was in sharp contrast to the thunderous welcome that Congress gave Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf last week. But it provoked some controversy, especially among Irish-Americans.

Protesters opposed to British occupation of Northern Ireland demonstrated near the Capitol.

Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II (D-Mass.) boycotted the speech, although his uncle, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), attended both the speech and a luncheon in the queen's honor afterward.

Rep. James P. Moran (D-Va.) was among several other Irish-American lawmakers who declined to attend.

Rep. Gus Savage (D-Ill.) boycotted the speech, saying the "queen of colonialism" presided over an empire "built on the exploitation of Africa and the Middle East."

Most other lawmakers appeared impressed in varying ways. It was a "very moving" appearance, said Sen. Alan K. Simpson (R-Wyo.).

"Here was a speaker you could really enjoy, knowing that nothing real heavy was going to come down," said Rep. Bill Richardson (D-N.M.).

In a comment that appeared to reflect more on Congress than the queen, Sen. J. James Exon (D-Neb.) sighed and observed, "It seems about all we do these days is go to ceremonial speeches."

Staff writers Guy Gagliotta, Tom Kenworthy and Kent Johnson Jr. contributed to this report.

Queen Elizabeth at the Washington Cathedral.

Get Her to The Church On Time

For the Queen, a Late Start On the Visit's Final Day

By Martha Sherrill
Washington Post Staff Writer

Support her in the ceaseless round of duty . . .
—letter by Bishop Ronald H. Morris

The queen was refreshingly late yesterday morning, to a private service at the Washington National Cathedral. Usually her car door swings grimly open as the clock's second hand sweeps perfectly, punctually into place.

But the Defender of the Faith was not on the dot. She was off by 30 minutes.

"They apologized for being late," Sanford Garner said very sweetly. He's the cathedral provost, after all. "But they did not explain why."

"Normal holdups," explained a British Embassy spokesman. "A snowtalling effect. Nothing out of the ordinary."

Lined up outside the cathedral, gaggles of tiny school kids—just 4 and 5 years old—held sweaty spring flowers picked from the Bishop's Garden while waiting to greet Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh. Inside, hundreds of the cathedral's "friends and family" held to their seats.

Farewell

QUEEN, From G1

Ushers circulated. The floors looked recently waxed. Two sparrows flew around the nave.

"We have wrens and pigeons too," said usher Julia Gaines. "They've gone through the metal detectors, so they'll be no harm to Her Majesty."

Another usher approached. They ushered themselves down memory lane . . . in 1965, when Queen Elizabeth brought the cathedral a kneeler, needlepointed by her mother . . . in 1976, when President Ford stepped on one usher's foot while walking with Queen Elizabeth down the aisle . . . in 1985, when they told people "no pictures allowed" of the Prince and Princess of Wales, just minutes before a hundred bulbs flashed anyway . . . and in 1990, when Prince Philip came to the flower mart and the Glastonbury Thorn mysteriously bloomed.

Other conversations sprang up, among worshipers. Protocol. Floor wax. The queen's travel wardrobe. This week she had already worn: melon, lemon, purple, maroon.

Bets were made.

"Turquoise," said a woman.

"Dark red," said one man.

"Noooooo," said the woman. "She's already worn maroon."

"Blue, then."

Blue it was.

Bagpipes began to play. At nearly 10:45, she greeted the children from Beauvoir School. They handed her a nosegay of pink roses. She walked down the aisle with Prince Philip, Bishop Ronald Haines, Provost Garner.

Heads stretched.

Several people stood on chairs.

Many took photographs.

The queen seemed to glide on the pale marble. Does she walk or float? In her blue flower-printed frock and white gloves and blue hat garnished with green leaves, beneath the soaring ceilings of the cathedral, lit by lamps and sunlight filtered through stained glass, embraced by an Anglican community, she seemed transcendental despite her handbag. And quite at home.

She received a gift—a book—from the cathedral. She walked past the great choir filled with choirboys and guests like John Chancellor and Chief of Protocol Joseph Reed. She sat in her own chair, next to Prince Philip's, facing the high altar. She prayed. She was blessed. She sang—"lustily," according to a cathedral source—the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

"It's one of her favorite hymns, we're told," said the source.

Isn't it American?

"Indeed!"

On her way out, she was extremely good at walking down marble stairs. She looked at them. She looked at the congregation. She spoke only to Provost Garner.

"She seemed very interested in the cathedral itself," said Garner in his soft Tennessee accent afterward. He seemed calm. He seemed unfazed. (Perhaps after so much conversation with God, the Queen of England is easy company.)

"She was interested in the cathedral's completion, as was His Royal Highness," said Garner. "And we talked about the congregation. I explained that we tried to invite all the cathedral's friends and family. She was gracious and very pleasant, and seemed particularly happy to greet children out front. She asked about the schools here. How many there are. How many students. That sort of thing."

When Garner walked the royals outside, their motorcade wasn't lined up yet. "Even then," he recounted, "they were relaxed and very pleasant."

After the queen left the cathedral, the material world began to intervene.

Her motorcade stopped at the British Embassy, then drove to Andrews Air Force Base. Her Majesty and His Royal Highness took the Concorde to Miami (along with protocol chief Reed), where her parties and overplanned events and travel wardrobe will continue.

Last night, for instance, a black-tie fete aboard the queen's 412-foot yacht Britannia was planned. Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan were scheduled to attend. At midnight, the royal pleasure boat planned to shove off for a trip around the Florida Keys and up the western coast, where the royals will spend a private weekend before bestowing—yes, it's now official—honorary knighthood on Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf at MacDill Air Force Base near Tampa on Monday.

His new title? Only the English could have come up with it: Honorary Knight Commander in the Military Division of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

BALTIMORE ORIOLES' BASEBALL GAME IN BALTIMORE, MD, ON MAY 15, 1991. SA [] U.S.S. ADVISED PRESIDENT GEORGE BUSH, QUEEN ELIZABETH II, AND PRINCE PHILIP WILL TRAVEL TO THE BASEBALL GAME BY HELICOPTER ARRIVING AT APPROXIMATELY 7:00 P.M. EASTERN STANDARD TIME. AT APPROXIMATELY 8:30 P.M., THE PRESIDENT AND HIS GUEST WILL DEPART THE STADIUM ARRIVING IN WASHINGTON, D.C, AT 8:55 P.M. FROM A REVIEW OF A LETTER TO THE EDITOR PRINTED IN THE PHILADELPHIA IRISH NEWSPAPER TITLED, "IRISH EDITION," AND CONTACT WITH A BALTIMORE U.S.S., IRISH GROUPS ARE PLANNING TO PROTEST AT QUEEN ELIZABETH II'S ATTENDANCE AT THE BASEBALL GAME AND A WHITE HOUSE EVENT (DATES UNKNOWN). THE ARTICLE STATED ANTI-BRITISH FEELINGS ARE RUNNING HIGH AS A RESULT OF WELL PUBLICIZED INJUSTICES INFLICTED ON THE BIRMINGHAM SIX BY THE CORRUPT ENGLISH JUDICIAL SYSTEM AND THE RECENT RASH OF BRUTAL MURDERS OF UNARMED IRISH NATIONALISTS IN THE SIX COUNTIES BY LOYALISTS DEATH SQUADS. THOUGH THE ARTICLE CONTAINED NO THREATS AGAINST THE PRESIDENT OR THE QUEEN, THE STATEMENTS COULD BE VIEWED AS BEING INFLAMMATORY. THE ARTICLE STATED THAT AN IRISH GROUP HAD RESERVED A LARGE BLOCK OF GRAND STAND TICKETS.

THE FOLLOWING INFORMATION PERTAINS TO PREPARATIONS MADE BY THIS OFFICE IN ANTICIPATION OF THE ROYAL VISIT WHICH COINCIDES WITH TRAVEL OF PRESIDENT AND MRS. REAGAN AND OTHER DIGNITARIES TO SAN FRANCISCO AT THE SAME TIME.

AT THE PRESENT TIME, THERE ARE TWO PRIMARY GROUPS WHO WILL BE STAGING PROTEST DEMONSTRATIONS AGAINST THE VISIT OF BOTH THE PRESIDENT AND THE QUEEN. THE FIRST HAS LABELED ITSELF THE "MARCH THIRD COALITION" AND IS COMPRISED OF TRADITIONAL LEFTIST GROUPS, INCLUDING THE LIVERMORE ACTION GROUP AMERICA INDIAN MOVEMENT, NATIONAL LAWYER'S GUILD, GAY AND LESBIAN GROUPS AND OTHER LOCAL ACTIVISTS. THEIR PRIMARY FOCUS AT THIS TIME APPEARS TO BE A LARGE DEMONSTRATION TO BE HELD ON THE NIGHT OF MARCH 3, 1983, SOMEWHERE NEAR THE AREA OF THE DE YOUNG MUSEUM WHERE THE STATE DINNER HONORING THE QUEEN WILL BE HELD. THE MARCH THIRD COALITION APPLIED FOR A USE PERMIT FOR THAT SECTION OF GOLDEN GATE PARK ADJACENT TO THE DE YOUNG MUSEUM, HOWEVER, THE SAN FRANCISCO POLICE DEPARTMENT WAS ABLE TO BLOCK ISSUANCE OF SUCH A PERMIT. THERE WILL BE A PRO-FORMA APPEAL BY THE MARCH THIRD COALITION TO THE

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

SAN FRANCISCO PARK AND RECREATION COMMISSION ON FEBRUARY 18, 1983, AND THEY THEN VOW TO TAKE THE ISSUE TO LOCAL COURT. A SPECIAL AGENT OF THIS OFFICE ATTENDED A PRESS CONFERENCE HELD BY THE MARCH THIRD COALITION ON MONDAY, JANUARY [REDACTED] AND AT THAT TIME, THEY ESTIMATED THE ATTENDANCE WOULD BE IN THE "THOUSANDS," AND AT THE SAME TIME CLAIMED THAT THEIR PROTEST WOULD BE "NON-VIOLENT."

b6
b7C

THE OTHER PRIMARY PROTEST GROUP WILL BE ONE ORGANIZED BY IRISH NORTHERN AID (NORAIID). [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]
[REDACTED] IS ACTING AS [REDACTED] FOR THE NORAIID PROTEST. IN AN INTERVIEW WITH THE SAN FRANCISCO POLICE DEPARTMENT, [REDACTED] PLEDGED TO HAVE DEMONSTRATORS PRESENT AT EVERY STOP THAT QUEEN ELIZABETH MAKES. HE ALSO INDICATED HE WAS TOYING WITH THE IDEA OF HAVING A BOAT GREET THE YACHT BRITANNIA WHEN IT SAILS UNDER THE GOLDEN GATE BRIDGE. ON THE NIGHT OF THE STATE DINNER, [REDACTED] IS PROPOSING TO HAVE A SOUP LINE WITH FREE BEER TO ILLUSTRATE THE CONTRAST WITH THE ELEGANCE OF THE STATE DINNER.

b6
b7C

IN COMMENTS PUBLISHED IN THE FEBRUARY 4, 1985, SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE, [REDACTED] CLAIMS THAT HE HOPES FOR A CROWD OF DEMONSTRATORS NUMBERING BETWEEN FIFTEEN AND THIRTY THOUSAND. [REDACTED] HAS MADE CONTINUAL REFERENCES TO CERTAIN "SURPRISES" IN STORE FOR THE VISITORS WHICH COULD BE POTENTIALLY EMBARRASSING AND DRAW GREAT MEDIA ATTENTION. THE PREVIOUS NORAID DEMONSTRATIONS AGAINST VISITING ROYALTY IN SAN FRANCISCO HAVE INCLUDED EYE-CATCHING STUNTS OF THIS TYPE.

b6
b7C

SAN FRANCISCO HAS MADE AN EFFORT TO INCREASE COVERAGE IN THE IRISH COMMUNITY, AND ASSETS INCLUDING [REDACTED] [REDACTED] HAVE ALL REPORTED THAT THE OPPORTUNITY TO DEMONSTRATE AGAINST THE QUEEN WILL BE HARD FOR MOST IRISH TO PASS UP, HOWEVER, ALL SUGGESTED THAT THESE ACTIVITIES WILL BE NON-VIOLENT. THESE SAME ASSETS ADDED THAT IF NORAID GOES AHEAD WITH ITS FREE-BEER GIVEAWAY, THAT THIS COULD ADD A DANGEROUS DIMENSION TO THE EVENTS PLANNED.

b7D

SAN FRANCISCO [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] AND [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] RECENTLY MET WITH THE SPECIAL AGENT IN CHARGE. SAN FRANCISCO ALSO DEALS WITH SECRET SERVICE AND THE SAN FRANCISCO POLICE DEPARTMENT INTELLIGENCE AND SPECIAL INVESTIGATIVE DETAILS ON A DAILY BASIS. THIS OFFICE HAS ALSO BRIEFED THE UNITED STATES ARMY INTELLIGENCE COMMAND (WHICH PROVIDES INTELLIGENCE TO THE U.S. COAST GUARD) AND THE U.S. STATE DEPARTMENT OFFICE OF SECURITY REGARDING THOSE PROTECTEES WHICH FALL UNDER THEIR JURISDICTION.

ALAMEDA COUNTY SHERIFF'S OFFICE, INTELLIGENCE UNIT, ADVISED THAT THEY HAVE AN ASSET WHO WILL BE IN A POSITION TO OFFER INFORMATION REGARDING THE MARCH THIRD COALITION. AGENTS HAVE MET WITH THAT ASSET TO OUTLINE OUR CONCERNS.

SAN FRANCISCO HAS ALSO CONTACTED THE MAJOR CHARTER SIGHT-SEEING FIRMS IN THE AREA, AND IT APPEARS THAT NO ARRANGEMENTS HAVE BEEN MADE AT THIS TIME BY NORWID TO CHARTER SUCH A VESSEL. IT APPEARS THAT THIS WOULD NOT BE ALLOWED IN ANY CASE BY THE FIRMS INVOLVED.

SAN FRANCISCO PLANS TO HAVE A SQUAD OF 20 AGENTS DESIGNATED FOR INCIDENT RESPONSE DURING THE VISIT. THESE AGENTS WILL BE FROM THE SQUADS WHICH COVER PFO AND PRESIDENTIAL ASSASSINATION

SF 185-403

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

STATUTE VIOLATIONS. SECRET SERVICE WILL PROVIDE IDENTIFICATION FOR ACCESS TO RESTRICTED AREAS.

ARRANGEMENTS HAVE ALSO BEEN MADE TO HAVE AN FBI AGENT PRESENT AT THE CENTRAL SECRET SERVICE/SAN FRANCISCO POLICE DEPARTMENT COMMAND POST FOR THE DURATION OF THE VISIT.

THE AGENT HAVING PRIMARY CASE RESPONSIBILITY WILL BE WITH SECRET SERVICE INTELLIGENCE AGENTS TO ASSIST THEM IN IDENTIFYING PERSONS OF INTEREST.

U.S. ATTORNEY, SAN FRANCISCO, HAS DESIGNATED AN ASSISTANT UNITED STATES ATTORNEY TO BE ON DUTY TO HANDLE ANY FEDERAL PROSECUTION PROBLEMS WHICH ARISE.

SAN FRANCISCO NOTES THAT BECAUSE OF THE WIDE VARIETY OF INTERESTS OF THE GROUPS INVOLVED IN THE PROTESTS AGAINST BOTH THE VISIT OF THE QUEEN AND THE PRESIDENT, IT WILL BE VERY HARD TO ANTICIPATE AND PREVENT INCIDENTS WHICH MAY EMBARRASS EITHER THE QUEEN OR THE PRESIDENT. AS THE VISIT TIME NEARS, IT CAN BE EXPECTED THAT THESE COALITIONS WILL COOPERATE MORE CLOSELY WITH ONE ANOTHER AND HOPEFULLY A MORE PRUDENT, NON-VIOLENT, TRADITIONAL PROTEST MENTALITY WILL PREVAIL.

A NEWSPAPER FURNISHED IN CAMDEN, NEW JERSEY, ENTITLED, "CHRISTIAN DEACON" DATED JULY 1, 1976, CONTAINS A PAGE ONE ARTICLE CAPTIONED, "BRITISH FACE BOSTON TEA PARTY". THE "CHRISTIAN DEACON" WHICH IS A PUBLICATION OF THE REVEREND CARL MC INTIRE OF THE 20TH CENTURY REFORMATION HOUR, DECLARS THAT THE QUEEN HAS BEEN REQUESTED TO DIRECT THAT THE BIBLE WORDS BE RESTORED TO A "LIBERTY BELL" WHICH THE QUEEN WILL PRESENT TO THE U.S. AS A BICENTENNIAL GIFT IN PHILADELPHIA ON JULY 6, 1976. THE ARTICLE INDICATED THAT A "BOSTON TEA PARTY" WAS BEING PREPARED FOR PHILADELPHIA ON THE MORNING OF JULY 6, 1976 WHEN THE ROYAL YACHT, BRITANNIA, COMES UP THE DELAWARE RIVER. A MODEL OF THIS BELL, MADE OF LIGHT SUBSTANCE IS BEING CONSTRUCTED IN CAPE MAY, NEW JERSEY, AND WILL BE ON DISPLAY THERE ON JULY 3-4, 1976. PRIOR TO BEING BROUGHT TO PHILADELPHIA

ON JULY 5, 1976, WHERE IT WILL BE DRIVEN THROUGH THE STREETS WITH A PRESS CONFERENCE TO BE HELD AT THE PENN'S LANDING. BEFORE THE ARRIVAL OF THE QUEEN'S YACHT, THE BELL WILL BE CAST INTO THE WATERS OF THE DELAWARE RIVER BELOW WALNUT STREET, WHERE THE QUEEN IS TO LAND. EARLY ON THE MORNING OF JULY 6, 1976, AS THE QUEEN COMES UP THE DELAWARE, A JET SKY WRITER WILL SPELL OUT IN THE SKY, " BRITAIN BANDS BIBLE VERSE FROM BELL." SEVERAL SMALL PLANES WILL CIRCULATE THROUGHOUT THE WHOLE AREA DROPPING GOSPEL TRACKS AND A STATEMENT OF THE NATURE OF THE OFFENSE AGAINST THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. EACH SIDE OF THE DELAWARE RIVER ON THE PENNSYLVANIA AND NEW JERSEY SIDE WILL HAVE GROUPS HOLDING BALLOONS CARRYING A MESSAGE TO THE QUEEN. GROUPS WILL BE STATIONED AT EACH INTERSECTION IN THE HISTORICAL AREA OF PHILADELPHIA WITH SIGNS AND TRACKS, AND ALL ARE REQUESTED TO JOIN IN THE PROTEST. WHEN THE PRESIDENT ENTERTAINS THE QUEEN AT THE WHITE HOUSE ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 7, 1976, AND HONORS HER AFTER SHE HAS ELIMINATED THE REFERENCE TO THE BIBLE ON "THE LIBERTY BELL OF 1976," AN APPROPRIATE PROTEST WILL BE MADE IN FRONT OF THE WHITE HOUSE AND IN LAFAYETTE PARK AT 7:00 P.M.
